Cancer is pandemic, with 15 million individuals newly diagnosed each year worldwide. This award-winning informational short film describes how the ancient Eastern exercise art of Qigong, a 4,000-year old holistic system of mindful exercise practiced for health, healing and longevity, can help to maintain and even enhance cancer-related quality of life.

Leading experts in the field, including researchers from Harvard Medical School, describe the complementary role of Qigong exercise in integrative oncology, while interviews with individuals with cancer who practice Qigong offer the personal perspective.

Independently produced, written and directed by Penelope J. Klein, EdD, PT, professor emeritus, D'Youville College, this film speaks powerfully to individuals with cancer and the family, friends and health professionals who serve them.
